Laughter at the Edge of Pathos

'Drinking Alone' proves we've the talent (and audience) for lusty amateur theatre

Frances Beames - Main Street

A standing ovation lasting several minutes indicated the crowd's approval of Theatre Morin Heights' recent production of Drinking Alone, a romantic comedy by Norm Foster. The play took off at speed and sustained the pace through an hour-long first act but nobody was looking at their watches. Ripples of laughter punctuated the opening lines as the audience relaxed and settled, secure in the knowledge that these actors were in control.

Playing Joe, a lonely bachelor, Dave Potter's exquisite timing earned howls of laughter, yet even as we laughed at his lines, we felt the edge of pathos. And gradually, as his and Corina Lupu's characters unfolded, we got to know and love this pair of mismatched losers.

Corina's "Renée," a single mom and ditzy hair stylist, grabbed our sympathy and held it despite her appalling gaffes: one kept wanting to shout "no no, Renée, don't say that," but she always did. No one would have guessed this was Corina's first stage appearance, and the fact that she was able to play a lead role and stay in character throughout the performance says much for her latent talent.

Anne Cuvillier's portrayal of Carrie, Joe's sister, as a tough gal with a drinking problem and a heart of mush, was spot-on. Here, too, we felt her pain even as we laughed at her caustic remarks.

Katherine Weary's role as Phyllis, the wicked stepmother, must have been difficult to approach. The audience was pre-conditioned to hate her (e.g. Carrie's insistence "that woman isn't going to sleep in my mother's bed!") nor did she have any of the boffo laugh lines that endeared the other players to us. Yet she created a warm, sympathetic, but down-to-earth character who was believable, and in the end perhaps more appealing than any others of the dysfunctional family she married into.

The father, Ivan, played by Bill Weary, and focus of a love/hate relationship with his son and daughter, was also set up to seem unlovable and then emerge, still gruff and outspoken, but basically a good guy. He brought a commanding energy to his part at his very entrance.

Director Penny Rose must be congratulated on pulling out rounded performances from what could have been cartoon characters. That the pace never slackened through the first act showed the skills of an experienced director, and contrasted neatly with a slower and more serious second act as the characters' motivations unfolded.

In amateur productions the backstage crew has a thankless task: long hours and no applause. If the costumes and makeup are done well, few people comment. The same holds true for the set. In this case the set designer and stage director had to work on the floor instead of on a stage, and had to light the set with immovable overhead spots and no footlights. Somehow, they all did their jobs superbly, contributing the essentials that allow the actors to function at their best. Congratulations to everyone involved.

How did they do it?

Frances Beames - Main Street

In early fall last year former Morin Heights councilor Don Stewart approached Maryse Emond, Director of Recreation and Culture, with a view to reviving the once highly successful drama group. They sent out letters to those formerly involved and others who had expressed an interest in the project. A dozen or so people turned up, and began Theatre Morin Heights' revival with a series of play-reading evenings at the Cultural Centre in the Morin Heights Library.

The group enjoyed their activities so much, they decided to produce a play for the public. Corina Lupu, approaching a milestone birthday, had a yen to celebrate it by appearing on stage. She had a further and splendid idea: invite friends to a theatre production and ask them, instead of bringing her birthday gifts, to donate money to Médecins sans Frontiers /Doctors Without Borders. The idea grew, and took wing. The group would go public, sell tickets and thus raise even more money. Richard Cohen took on the job of producer, and the multi-talented Penny Rose agreed to direct.

Drinking Alone, a comedy, was presented in a nightclub setting with bistro tables and a wine bar in Morin Heights Community Centre. To say it was well received is an understatement. Two sold-out audiences were blown away by sheer enjoyment of the show, and the high level of professionalism it exhibited. This production will, the participants hope, bring back an awareness of living theatre to the Morin Heights region, and encourage others to take part in future productions.

And oh yes, Médecins sans Frontiers/Doctors Without Borders will receive $1,705.00.

Happy Birthday, Corina!

A Little Something for the Ducks....by Jean Lenox Toddle

INTERMISSION

The Love Course....by A.R. Gurney

Fables for friends

by Mark O'Donnell

Things are not always what they seem... that's the life lesson three teenaged girls have a chance to learn when they stop at Tony's Café for a snack on their way home from school.

Sarah Breger, (Liz)

Sarah is 14 years old and attends high school in Lachute where she studies drama. She has acted in a few elementary school productions and looks forward to performing with Village Theatre. Sarah is an avid reader and loves to write.

Tamara Stohr, (Libby)

Tamara is 17 and an exchange student from Germany. She lives in Morin Heights and has attended school in Lachute for the last 9 months. Village Theatre has given her a chance to get involved in the community. She performed in "A Christmas Carol".

June Angus, director

June acted in high school. She wrote and directed a one-act play performed at school and by a troupe of student actors. 25 years later, she returned to theatre with a minor role in Village Theatre's production of "A Christmas Carol". She also sings with Joyful Noise Choir in Morin Heights.

Christel de Vries, (Beth)

A student at Laurentian Regional High School in Lachute, Christel is 14 and has acted in a few elementary school productions and played in Village Theatre's "A Christmas Carol". Christel is also an accomplished stills performer with Drôle de Cirque in St-Jerome and she plays the flute.

Bill Weary, (Older man)

Bill has performed in several Theatre Morin Heights plays, most recently as Ivan in "Drinking Alone". A retired teacher and world traveler, Bill has been a Morin Heights resident for several decades. He found that learning his lines in this production was a breeze.

Michael Rosenberg, (Tony) See biography under "The Love Course". He is playing in 2 of our 3 one-act plays.

A Little Something for the Ducks

by Jean Lenox Toddle

With only the ducks for friends, Sam, an aging widower, has grown despondent and tired of life. Then he meets Irma beside the duck pond on the grounds of the senior citizens' complex, and the sun begins to shine again.

Richard Cohen (Samuel)

Richard was a member of the Board of the original Theater Morin Heights and starred in its second production, "Fashion Show - past and present". He produced a musical soirée, "Dinner & Jazz" at William's Pub in 2000, and produced "Drinking Alone" last year.

Katherine Weary, director
Katherine performed in 2 Theatre Morin Heights productions and directed many school plays in exotic locales: Qatar, Nigeria and Morin Heights. This is her first attempt directing adults. "They're harder to boss around, but with two such talented actors, it's been a piece of cake."

Penny Rose (Irma)

A local legend, Penny was involved in many Theatre Morin Heights productions as stage manager, director or producer. She's also the coordinator of local Shakespeare-in-the-Park and involved in the local music scene. "A Christmas Carol" was her first acting experience.

The Love Course

by A. R. Gurney

A female professor teaches a course on the literature of love with a male colleague. She has beguiled him through books. Now, in the last class of the year, she attempts to bring the course and their relationship to a climactic conclusion.

Corina Lupu (Professor Carroway)

This is Corina's second acting performance with Morin Heights Village Theater. She debuted starring in "Drinking Alone" in 2002. A Morin Heights resident for 16 years, she is a board-certified veterinarian specializing in birds and exotic animals and teaches at the Université de Montréal.

Libby Barratt, director

Libby has been involved in theatre since Grade 5. A long-time member (and former President) of Lakeshore Players, she has acted in and directed many productions. She's a Concordia graduate now retired and living in Lachute. She also directed "A Christmas Carol."

Laura Young (Sally)

Laura, a resident of Ivry and mother of a three-year-old, has organized many shows/skits, sung back-up, worked as an extra in films, and was on stage "all the time" as a child ballerina. She holds a B.A. from Concordia. This is her first major dramatic role.

David Potter (Professor Burgess)

David first acted with Theatre Morin Heights in "The Public Eye" in 1988. He has acted and worked back stage on many productions. He was "Joe Todd" in "Drinking Alone" and has also enjoyed a number of roles with Lakeshore Players, including "Jacob Mercer" in the recent Canadian drama "Leaving Home".

Michael Rosenberg (Mike)

Michael recently moved to Val Morin from the west. He did interactive role playing, freelance performance art, and fire spinning with Empty Space Theatre in Edmonton. He workshopped "One Yellow Rabbit" in Calgary and plans to travel to India this fall. He also plays Tony in "Fables for Friends."

The play "Nature's Victory", written by Don Stewart, was inspired by the out-of-print 1969 novel called "Land Possessed." This novel was written by the late Margaret Cook and was set in nearby Shrewsbury (the Gore) of the 19th century. Further inspiration for the play was provided by the late Patricia Good, fifth generation Shrewsbury artist and creator of a painting entitled "Nature's Victory."

Three sellout performances Theatre Morin Heights Nature's Victory a winner

Frances Beames - Main Street

A packed house rose to its feet with wild applause as the curtain fell on Morin Heights Theatre's first home-grown all-Laurentian play. Something magical had happened, something to make us feel enormous pride in our ancestors, in our small town, in our dramatic group.

Capably directed by Katherine Weary, and produced by Penny Rose, Morin Heights resident Don Stewart's play "Nature's Victory" is a period piece, set in the 1870's in the Stewsbury (Gore) area.

Those pioneer times were tough. Families depended on their children to help get the land cleared, the seeds into the ground, the produce harvested. Marrying off the young folk to suitable partners was of prime importance: the land had to stay in good hands, in families like ours.

However, Cupid is not concerned with families and land, but shoots his arrows at random. Thus the theme of Don's play: needless tragedy stemming from racial and religious prejudices brought as baggage from the old country, and resulting eventually, in the demise of the village of Gore.

The clever set, designed by Corina Lupu, was framed on one side by a church window with a scrim allowing us to see and hear Rev. Thompson, (Lorne Barratt), and on the other by the ever-encroaching forest (real trees). The main action took place center stage against a plain black wall, using minimal props for scene changes.

Sam Kirby, played by Graham Carpenter, is a powerful, opinionated leader who is slowly losing his fight to build Stewsbury into a village, if not the town of his dreams. Caroline Barnes, in her third appearance with Theatre Morin Heights, played his wife, Sheila Kirby, with a fine Irish accent. Caroline managed to project her difficulty in loyally supporting her husband while sympathizing with, perhaps even envying, Norah (Janet Saline), Sheila (Caroline Barnes) and Sam Kirby (Graham Carpenter) their daughter Norah who has found true love. At the same time she, like her husband, is hoping their only child will give up her romantic notions and marry a local (meaning local Protestant) young man who will help them expand their farm.

Janet Saline (once hissed for her wickedly bitchy role in a previous TMH production) created Norah Kirby as an adorably innocent teenager in love, eliciting "aw-w-w" noises from an enchanted audience. Denis Tremblay, the romantic French boy who comes courting her, was convincingly played by Lee-Ann Mascis.

Perhaps most likeable of the male characters was the English schoolmaster, Mr. Harmon, (Willie Lasky) who encourages Norah to continue her education and become a teacher. Her father Sam, ever upright and sure of his uprightness, objects to this encouragement, as well as to Harmon's habit of sampling the latest brew from the local still.

almost misery, has come back with her granddaughter, Genevieve Tremblay, to visit her parents' grave. Libby Barratt gave a touching performance as the nonagenarian, wandering amongst tombstones and memories. She has defied her parents, refused the only available Protestant young man, and chosen to marry a Tremblay from St. Jerome.

Maria McCarthy, playing granddaughter Genevieve, was convincing in her surprise at and disbelief of the narrow-minded attitudes in times past, e.g. Norah's father refusing to attend her wedding to a Tremblay.

As "old" Norah placed flowers on her mother's gravestone, the curtain fell to thunderous applause and shouts of "Author!" to which Don Stewart, for once at a loss for words, made an embarrassed bow.

As with all theatre productions, there were at least three support people backstage for every one out front. Penny Rose, producer of the event, remained cool and unfustered to the final curtain, and deserved all the applause she received. Director Kathy brought out the best in her cast, some of whom were inexperienced actors, yet were required to speak with French, Irish or English accents. She made the play so believable, the relieved author said happily, "The audience laughed in all the right places!"

The makeup team of Claire Marcotte and Monica Silva did a professional job, convincingly ageing some people, changing the sex of another. Costumes, by Michèle Ryan, kept that 19th century feeling (imagine those poor women wearing high-necked dresses in a hot summer).

Theatre Morin Heights is to be congratulated for once again producing a high quality, three-performance sell-out. Some of the proceeds will go towards Shakespeare in the Park in Morin Heights next summer.

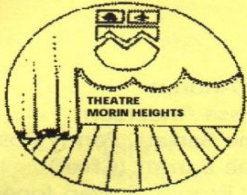

Norah (Janet Saline), Sheila (Caroline Barnes) and Sam Kirby (Graham Carpenter)

This popular watering hole in the woods, run by Steve Friedman as James Morton, the moonshine man, is indirectly the cause of tragedy. When local bad boy Arthur Brown, played by Neil Matheson, has a few too many one night, the rumours of Norah being seen with a French boyfriend bring out the evil in his prejudiced heart. A menacing figure as he waits to attack Denis Tremblay on his way home from Lachute Fair, Arthur refuses to believe that the young Frenchman cannot swim, and hurts him into the dark lake.

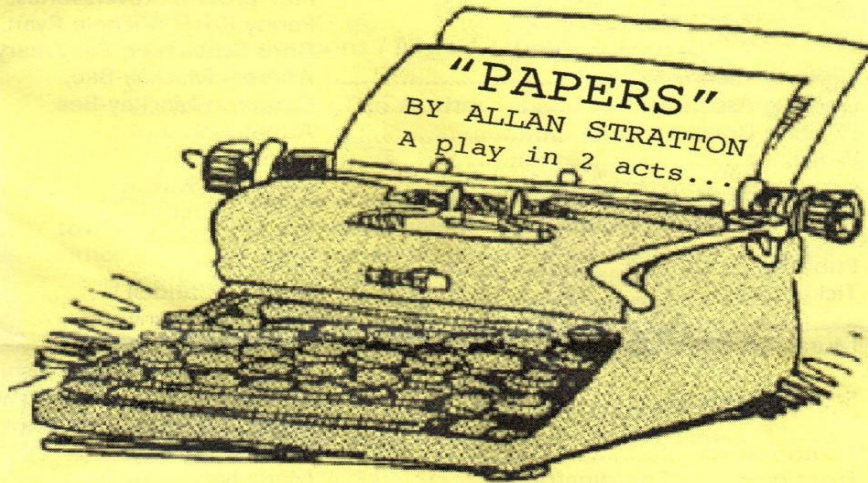

Alas, it is true Denis cannot swim. But the only witness, young John Small, played by Travis Caron, denies their involvement, and Arthur escapes blame for the murderous deed.

The final scene shows us Stewsbury graveyard 70 years later. The cemetery, wild with long grass and weeds and tilted gravestones, is the only remnant of Stewsbury village. Norah, now
